My portfolio is intentionally part of my CV because it reflects how I think, experiment, and approach product development beyond a traditional resume, you can have a look at it in my website:

About Me

I'm a web developer from Spain, currently relocating to Berlin, focused on building digital products that feel polished, intentional, and easy to use.

My approach combines frontend development, visual design, and practical problem solving. I enjoy creating interfaces that are not only technically solid, but also clear, responsive, and pleasant for the user.

I like learning by building real projects, experimenting with new ideas, and improving every detail until the final result feels useful and well-crafted. I'm especially interested in working on products where design and engineering come together.
